Warsaw Pact proposes new 'peace' treaty to Nato

By Our Foreign Staff

The Warsaw Pact yesterday proposed a non-aggression treaty with Nato moving to a significant new stage in the Soviet Union's current peace offensive.

It had been expected that the Prague summit would continue Mr Andropov's attempts to head off the stationing of limited States cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Western Europe, due to begin this year.

In the first reaction to the Warsaw Pact's proposal, Mr Pym, the Foreign Secretary, said last night that the world had had non-aggression pacts before and they had not prevented aggressive action.

The Foreign Secretary, who was being interviewed on BBC Television, agreed that the proposals were worth studying but not a breakthrough.

Pym trip to Gulf states is called off

By Michael Knipe

Mr Francis Pym, the Foreign Secretary, decided yesterday to postpone his visit to the Gulf states in the wake of the dispute with Saudi Arabia over Britain's refusal to accept a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) in an Arab League delegation to London last month.

The postponement followed what the Foreign Office called "the latest soundings" from the countries concerned.

By yesterday, however, he had changed his mind. The Gulf states still wanted the visit to take place, Mr Pym said.

Asked by a BBC interviewer whether it might not have been better to have called off the whole trip immediately, the Foreign Secretary said it would not have been appropriate to do so.

The Foreign Secretary rejected the suggestion that there had been clumsy handling of a affair by the Foreign Office.

Mr Pym said he regretted the Arab League decision to add a PLO representative at the last minute and regretted that Saudi Arabia had decided to protest in the way it had.

Mr Johnson said the police officers arrived and jumped into the sea to try to rescue the holidaymaker.

Ropes were thrown to him, and PCs Connolly, Bradley and Abram went into the water but got into difficulties.

Several attempts were made to get the ropes to the officers but they were lost in the sea.

Conditions were so bad during the rescue attempts that offshore lifeboats were unable to help, Mr Johnson said.

"Conditions were just indescribable and it reflects well on these individuals that they were prepared to go into that sea. It was quite horrifying."

Storms add to southern Africa drought disaster

From Ray Kennedy, Johannesburg

Prayer has come too late to save large areas of Southern Africa from the ravages of the worst drought since records were first kept 68 years ago. Yesterday, special church services for rain were held throughout South Africa. Mr P. W. Botha, the Prime Minister, called for a national day of prayer last week in response to a request from the Dutch Reformed Churches. He said that if rain fell earlier, South Africa would still pray in thanksgiving.

In some areas heavy thunderstorms have broken during the past few days. In the Kruger National Game Park where hundreds of antelope, wild-beast and other grazing animals have been dying of thirst, rivers are again in flood. But elsewhere the storms have brought disaster as well as relief. At Delmas, an Eastern Transvaal town, nearly 5 in of rain fell in one hour at the weekend. Flash floods caused more than £60,000 damage and 100,000 week-old chickens were drowned when storm waters inundated battery buildings.

The drought probably means that it will have little maize to export and will have to draw on the stocks to fill domestic requirements. Farmers already faced with a 13 per cent increase in the price of fertilizer from January 1 will certainly demand extra subsidies to make up for their reduced output, a request the Government which relies heavily on their political support cannot ignore.

The total result is that there will be a further vicious twist in the cost of living spiral which increased by 14 per cent last year and at least 12 per cent was projected for this year. At present, over most of South Africa, there is hardly a cloud in sight.

Virtually the whole of South Africa, with the exception of the Natal coastal belt and the Western Cape region is affected by the drought. The neighbouring territories of Swaziland, Botswana and Namibia are similarly affected. Spokesmen for agricultural cooperatives in the Eastern and Northern Transvaal provinces said yesterday that more than one million tons of maize - the staple food of Africans - had so far been lost because of drought.

A spokesman said: "This has been the driest year since records were begun in 1915. According to our figures, 60 per cent of the maize crop in the area is stunted." South Africa has a stockpile of maize and exports a considerable quantity of its surplus, at prices lower than farmers are paid for producing it.

17 writers on trial in Turkey

From Rasit Gardilick, Ankara

Seventeen leading Turkish writers, who make up the executive board of the Turkish Writers' Union, appeared before a military court in Istanbul yesterday on charges of "spreading communist propaganda" and links with "illegal organizations". The 82-page indictment alleges that the defendants had links with the outlawed Communist Party of Turkey and such illegal organizations as the Turkish Peace Association, the Progressive Trade Unions Confederation and the Progressive Youth Association, whose leaders are now on trial for their part in the 1970s. The accused include Mr Aziz Nesin, a humorist of international fame and chairman of the Writers' Union, Mr Bekir Yildiz, and Mr Asim Bezirci, both well-known writers, and Mr Osman Sait Arolat.

Mr Orhan Apyaydin, the Istanbul Bar Association's president, and Mr Atal Behramoglu, a poet, already on trial for their leading positions within the Turkish Peace Association, were also among the defendants. The court adjourned until January 12. A military prosecutor in Diyarbakir, south-east Turkey, has demanded the death penalty for 106 alleged Kurdish separatists on trial here, the martial law command announced.

Aborigines want to be a nation

From Tony Deboadin, Melbourne

Senator Neville Bonner, the only Aboriginal member of the Australian Federal Parliament, has called for the creation of a separate Aboriginal nation by the 1990s. The senator, who represents Queensland, was condemned by Mr Johannes Bjelke-Petersen, Queensland's conservative Premier, who said that the suggestion was racist. Senator Bonner, a member of the Liberal Party which rules in coalition in both Canberra and in Queensland, said at the opening of the four-day annual conference of the Aboriginal and Island Catholic Council earlier this week that he hoped to see the Aboriginal race firmly established as a separate nation by the 1990s. "We have been pushed and herded and shoved around by whites for too long", he said.

Mr Bjelke-Petersen said Mr Bonner's suggestion was dangerous and could lead to untold problems for Australia. Mr Bonner told the conference that white people could no longer blame early generations for the treatment of Aborigines. "All that has changed today is white men have replaced bullets and poisoned water holes and poisoned flour with a more subtle and sophisticated form of discrimination to keep Aborigines oppressed and fragmented."

Japan plays the trade dispute cards its way

From Richard Hanson, Tokyo

A senior Japanese government official likes to use the following card game analogy to explain why Japan's view of how to handle trade relations differs from that of the United States and Europe. Americans gamble at stud poker, which requires a fine sense of bluff, he says. Europeans prefer contract bridge, in which the players signal to partners by bidding without revealing their hands. Japan's native card game, on the other hand, is hanafuda, a simple exercise where points are made by matching one artfully drawn card with its proper mate.

Mr Shinuro Abe, Japan's Foreign Minister, is in Europe this week on a five-nation tour - yesterday he was in Bonn and Paris after visiting London on Tuesday - trying to do a bit of the latter, and thereby ease the strains which now plague EEC-Japan relations. He is the first senior official to visit Europe since Mr Yasuhiro Nakasone, the Prime Minister, named his new Cabinet in November last year. His cards, mainly a round of tariff cuts, including reductions on biscuits and chocolate, and promises of other market-opening steps, are indeed on the table. Just as clearly, however, both are still playing at different games for stakes which include the free trading system, as Japan knows it. "Japan identifies all trade problems in terms of cognac, biscuits and chocolate," comments a European trade official about the Japanese Government's tendency to find matching solutions to individual complaints form trading partners. "We are talking about structural changes in Japan's trading system." The EEC is pursuing such change through the Gatt (the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade).

From Mr Abe's point of view, expressed in an interview before leaving for Europe, the problem is not Japan's market structure and distribution system. Japan, he says, is the most advanced among the advanced nations in cutting back on tariff barriers. France, for one, is a far greater sinner (with 27 Japanese items under some form of import restraint). The Japanese Foreign Minister is suggesting that the EEC and Japan begin talks at a ministerial level, in addition to the annual exchanges which take place at a bureaucratic level. There is doubt, however, about whether opening another avenue will break the logjam, especially if Europe continues to talk about the need for break changes in Japan.

Vote shatters Black Alliance

From Our Correspondent, Johannesburg

South Africa's Black Alliance - which includes black, Coloured and Indian political interests, has been shattered by an overwhelming vote by the Coloured Labour Party to participate in the Government's proposed constitutional system which excludes South Africa's majority blacks from the legislative process. The Labour Party is the dominant party among the country's 2.7 million Coloured population, a mainly Afrikaans-speaking section which has been historically spurned by white South Africans. The party was responsible for the collapse two years ago of the Coloured Representative Council a Body set up by the Government to give Coloureds a sham "parliament" of their own instead of the equal franchise they enjoyed until the Nationalist Government came to power.

At the Labour Party's conference in Edmore, in Natal Province, there were only nine votes on Tuesday night, among more than 300 delegates, against dialogue with the Government on the constitutional plans. The decision is a massive boost for the Government and for Mr P. W. Botha, the Prime Minister, who has pledged to consult Coloured and Indian leaders on the plans for reform but has adamantly maintained that the country's 18 million blacks will have no part in the new deal. The Labour Party's vote came after Chief Gaisa Buthelezi, the Zulu leader and head of the Black Alliance, warned delegates that acceptance of the Government's plan would make Coloureds "enemies in the eyes of black South Africans. He said that for Coloureds and Indians to accept proposals which excluded blacks from vital decision-making processes would be a "disaster for them and everybody". He rejected the notion that the proposals were a step in the right direction. Reacting to the conference decision, Chief Buthelezi said yesterday: "I did my duty as chairman of the Black Alliance and also as an African leader of the largest recognized constituency in the country. Their decision did come as a surprise knowing as I do the amount of behind-the-scenes arm twisting that went on." It is clear from initial black reaction that the Labour Party vote signifies a decisive rift in black solidarity ranks and a severe blow to black, coloured and Asian leaders who have felt they could bring all of South Africa's non-whites under a single umbrella hostile to white rule.

Bush hunt for hostage as whites are buried

From Stephen Taylor, Harare

Senior figures in Zimbabwe's farming sector, including Senator Denis Norman, Minister of Agriculture, yesterday attended funerals for victims of the new year onslaught by Matabeleland dissidents. The minister and Mr James Sielair, President of the Commercial Farmers' Union, were at the funerals in Bulawayo of Mr David Walters, his sons Sean and Michael, aged two and four, and his brother-in-law, Mr John Hearne. At a quiet ceremony at his farm about 30 miles away, Mr Benji Williams, aged 71, who was murdered soon after being taken hostage by rebels, was laid to rest. Amid emotional scenes and the continuing hunt for a second hostage being force marched through the bush towards Botswana. Military Authorities are taking stock of the situation in the troubled western province. It is clear that after a lull in September and October, when they appeared to be running short of ammunition the dissidents are back in a confident and aggressive frame of mind. Apart from the three reported outrages since Christmas eve, from which the toll is nine dead and more than 20 injured there have been other incidents which have gone unreported. The revulsion over the worst of the incidents in the past week the murder of two children and the beheading of Pat Williams, has affected even blacks who were allocated from the Government by the dismissal of Mr Joshua Nkomo from the Cabinet last February.

Las Vegas hotel settles fire claims at $105m

From Michael Hamlyn, New York

The huge MGM Grand Hotel in Las Vegas, which stands like a temple to the god of gaming in the neon-lit desert valley, has agreed a final pay-out of $75m (£47m) to those injured where flames and smoke struck the gamblers and money changers in its gilded chambers. The settlement brings to $105m the damages that the hotel owners have agreed to pay to 3,500 claimants - survivors and relatives of the 85 people killed by the blaze in the early hours of November 21, 1981.

The casino was crowded with players - there are no clocks in Las Vegas gaming halls - when a fire which had smouldered in an attic burst out. Most of the victims died of smoke inhalation in some of the world's largest hotels. The hotel did not have automatic sprinklers in much of the building and fire officials are sure that such a system could have prevented the deaths. The hotel was refurbished at a cost of about $50m and reopened seven months later complete with sprinklers and life-support equipment. The settlements do not include claims against defendants, including architects and contractors involved in designing and building the hotel.

MARKET SUMMARY

Index climbs above 600 level again

The equity market went back through the 600 level yesterday by the overnight surge on Wall Street where the Dow Jones Industrial Average leapt 19 points on hopes of a cut in oil production by Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest oil producer.

The FT Index closed at its high for the day up 13.8 at 612.7 - the biggest one-day gain in two months.

Meanwhile, MFI Furniture Group looks set to make 1983 a year to remember.

News of the bumper spending spree at the New Year sales has sent analysts scurrying away to upgrade their original estimates of the outcome for the year.

Brokers Scrimgeour Kemp Gee have just finished running their slide rules over the group and are now looking for at least £22m for the year compared with £15m in 1982.

Earlier estimates were between £17m and £19m. Scrimgeour says MFI is a good company doing better than most of its competitors.

Since the interim figures were announced last July, showing pretax profits up from £4.9m to £7.1m, the share price has leapt from 70p to as new high of 162p. But yesterday they paused for breath, losing 5p to 155p on profit-taking.

Gills enjoyed selective support with the index-linked stocks being singled out by the institutions. Among them Treasury 2½, per cent 2011½, Treasury 2½, per cent 2009 rose 1½, to 299½, and Treasury 2 per cent 1966 gained 1½, to 108½.

Brokers James Capel say the institutions have switched from conventional gilts to index-linked until the market develops a definite trend.

As a result, the rest of the market was showing falls of up to 2½, with dealers hating themselves for a new index-linked tap once the two existing taps have been exhausted.

The strength of the equity market was highlighted by BP's latest fund raising exercise. Scrimgeour Kemp Gee and Hoare Govett, brokers, placed 5.6 million shares at about 295p to pay for the group's latest acquisition.

It has to be noted that the final dividend will be waived because of poor group performance.

Avon Rubber leapt 5p to 98p on news that Mr James O'Hara had emerged as the mystery buyer of the shares. He now owns 875,000, including 375,000 held under the name of Max Morel.

Michael Clark

C. Gordon Tether The truth about our aid record

We have just been passing through the season of goodwill. It is also - as Scrooge would have said - before the "visions" that he ought to start looking at the world through rose-tinted spectacles - the season of humbug.

And it has to be said that there has been a substantial admixture of the latter in the efforts British ministers have recently been making to demonstrate that, where overseas aid is concerned, we in this country are apt - to quote Mr Tim Eggar, Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Overseas Development - "to do ourselves down a bit too much."

To begin with, we have had Mr Francis Pym, the Foreign Secretary, making a great song and dance about the fact that the aid flow from Britain will be increasing slightly faster in the next Budget year than inflation - it should come out about 3 per cent higher in real terms.

It is, of course, a matter for satisfaction that we are no longer cutting down assistance to the overseas poor. But, in putting this on record, Mr Pym put a considerable red herring into the debate on the adequacy of our contribution to this cause by comparing it favourably with that of the Soviet Union.

When, after all, it was accepted that Russians' behaviour provided an appropriate measuring stick in matters of this kind? What he also omitted to do was to put Britain's enhanced generosity in the context of the recipient countries' fast-deteriorating economic circumstances.

It is important to understand that the indicated new level of British official aid - 0.44 per cent of the gross national product - is little more than half the target figure long since accepted as the minimum the advanced countries would have to aim for if the drive to eliminate world poverty was to stand any chance of becoming meaningful.

There is the further point that the additional British contribution will be no more than a drop in the ocean of financial need that has engulfed the developing world as the result of the steep rise in its debt servicing costs and the accompanying severe contraction in its commodity exports.

No less relevant is the fact that one country's meat being so often another's poison, the developments that have cost the overseas poor so dear have conferred massive benefits on rich countries like Britain.

The British financial community has reaped an enormous harvest from the swollen debt payments that have crippled the overseas poor. Similarly the drop in their export earnings has meant huge import savings for us.

To have been willing to restore in increased aid no more than a tiny fraction of this immense bounty to the hard-pressed countries that furnished it can hardly be described as anything but the height of meanness.

Then there's the case of Sir Geoffrey Howe, the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Waxing eloquent last year about Britain's aid programme, he pointed out that "we were indeed a 'one world' society." Having argued that we could not hope to understand, let alone overcome, the problems facing developing countries if we entertained a "too neatly simplified view" of how the world economy works, he went on to stress that trade remained the most effective means of strengthening the partnership between rich and poor countries.

Yet it is not precisely because Britain and other like-minded advanced countries have entertained a "too simplified view of how the world economy works" that it has now been reduced to a shambles?

And has that not, in the process, inflicted immense suffering on the poor countries and dislocated the trade that is "the most effective means" of strengthening the partnership between the "haves" and "have-nots"?

Clearly, if we really want to improve our "aid image," we must first get away from the hypocrisy.

CRICKET: FIERCE DEBATE OVER TEST UMPIRING

Victims of the camera's cruel eye

From John Woodcock Cricket Correspondent, Sydney

If England lose the present Test match and the Ashes with it, as they probably will, it will be because Australia are the better side and not because of the umpiring. Despite the cause of the decisions made in the last few weeks have been an unusual enough for the umpires, just as they were at the end of England's series against Pakistan last summer, to be at the centre of almost every cricketing conversation.

rebounded to short leg. It emphasized what a very long way forward Wessex was when given leg-before to Botham. It even revealed that, technically, Gower was caught off no-ball. Lawson, the bowler, having broken the return crease with his back foot.

Were it not for television no one could ever have written this. I came here for the first time with Freddie Brown's side in 1950-51, since when job in perhaps any sport to do in everyone's satisfaction.

With every slow motion replay the day comes nearer when umpires themselves will be able to call for one. "Yes," Sir Donald Bradman said from Adelaide yesterday. "We've arrived at a point where there is sufficient evidence to suggest it should be helpful. It could be practicable at Test level, at which the importance of the occasion might be said to justify the expense. It would have to be restricted to run outs, stumpings and just possibly to catches. Sir Donald stressed that what he said was not intended as a criticism of the umpires. "We have to make their decisions at full speed and the pressures have become greater than they were."

Bird for Kenya

Harold Bird, the Test match umpire, is to spend a month in Kenya helping the country's umpires by standing in matches and giving lectures. Kenya, who are associate members of the International Cricket Conference, are keen to improve their cricketing standards.

Lillee must prove his fitness

Dennis Lillee has been overlooked by the Australian selectors for the first two Benson and Knicker World Series Cup matches against New Zealand and England on Sunday and Tuesday respectively. The selectors decided not to risk Lillee, who has not played since Australia's heavy defeat in the Sheffield Shield match against West Indies in Tasmania in November.

TENNIS: THE HAPPY CHALLENGE OF CLIMBING TO THE SUMMIT

The most exciting feature of professional tennis in 1983 continues to be the return to formal competition of Bjorn Borg, aged 26. The council who govern the grand prix circuit have revised, imperfectly, the clumsy rule that induced Borg to leave the circuit in 1979.
